

INVESTMENT update

APRIL 2020

Are you thinking of switching your investment?

Please talk to the AMIST Super team before deciding. Switching investments at the wrong time may cost you real money.

Understandably, there's a lot of fear in our lives now because of the global COVID-19 pandemic.

One of the ways we're all affected by this fear is the impact it has on investment markets and consequently our superannuation.

We've seen international and Australian markets fall. So, we understand members will be very worried. And, we also know that when super balances fall a typical reaction is to want to move out of higher risk investment options and switch to something that doesn't fluctuate daily, like cash. But this might not be the right move for you.

Even though no one could have predicted this global pandemic, you can be assured that our team of investment professionals always have the portfolio positioned to allow for some market downturn. For instance, while we've seen global equity markets fall 30% financial year to date, the AMIST MySuper portfolio is down 6.5% in comparison*. And we are constantly monitoring the situation and actively managing our investment portfolio through this crisis.

You trust us to manage your super in the good times. You can trust us to apply the same expertise in these difficult times too, keeping in mind that for the short-term, markets will continue to be rocky.

Switching investments should always be a considered decision. So, if you are thinking of switching you should get advice to ensure your decision aligns with your long-term goals.
